ABSTRACT

A survey was conducted in May 1982 of all academic libraries in Illinois to elicit information regarding the provision of bibliographic instruction, user education, or library orientation to undergraduates, graduate students, and faculty members during the 1981/82 calendar year. Usable replies were received from 143 libraries (70% of those surveyed). It was found that methods of group instruction included group tours (used by 87% of respondents), separate lectures (68%), instruction through informal groups (29%), and formal library courses (25%), with a typical audience size reported as 30. Methods of individual instruction were found to include handouts (used by 59% of respondents), audiovisual programs (31%), workbooks (13%), and computer assisted instruction (CAI) programs (5%). Very little formal or informal evaluation of bibliographic instruction activities was reported. This publication describes survey methodology and results, including eight tables of findings. A sample questionnaire is also provided. The second section presents a directory, organized by type of library, giving the name, address, and telephone number of respondents; the person responsible for bibliographic instruction; institutional enrollment; subjects covered; types of instruction and instructional materials used; and information on evaluation of instructional activities. Nonrespondents are also listed. Following the directory are indexes by type of instruction, type of materials used, subject area, and name of person in charge. (ESR)

We thank the staff of the Library Research Center for conducting the survey on which this report is based, specifically Daisy Auyeung for coding the responses, David Conboy and Diane Forster for keying them into a computer file, Ron Crocker for writing the input programs, Susan Bonzi for writing the programs for the analysis of the data and the preparation of the directory, Herbert Goldhor for the preparation of the tables, and Carrie Klabunde for their verification, Lisa Bachrach for the charts, and Kathy Painter for typing the text. We also thank Roland Person who helped design the questionnaire while he served on the Bibliographic Instruction Committee.

INTRODUCTION

by Melissa Cain

This report is part of a series entitled Illinois Library Statistical Report. The series is published by the Illinois State Library on a continuing basis and is part of a program for collecting statistical data and other information on all types of libraries in Illinois. The Library Research Center at the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign has contracted to conduct the necessary surveys, analyze the responses, and prepare a report of each study for the State Library. In turn, the State Library distributes the published reports.

The Library Research Center regularly receives advice on its work for this series of reports from relevant committees and persons within the appropriate professional associations. In this instance, the advisory committee was made up of individuals within the Illinois Association of College and Research Libraries (IACRL). This advisory committee recommended to the Library Research Center and the State Library that the 1982 statistical report relating to academic libraries be concerned with the topic of bibliographic instruction, sometimes called user education.

The subject of bibliographic instruction has been one of import for academic libraries in Illinois over the past decade. In 1978 IACRL recognized the great interest in this subject within the state and established a standing committee, the Bibliographic Instruction Committee, which remains active today. The Association also encouraged the preparation of Library Instruction Programs in Illinois Academic Libraries: A Directory and Survey Report written by Melissa Cain and Lois Pausch, and published by ILA and IACRL in 1978. That publication was the first survey ever conducted in Illinois on the subject of bibliographic instruction, and the results were beneficial for a number of reasons. Perhaps the greatest achievement was providing descriptions of ongoing bibliographic instruction programs in 55 college and university libraries. At that time it was apparent that some institutions had developed in-depth programs; some had devised sophisticated instructional materials ranging from workbooks to media presentations; and others were investigating the use of computer-assisted instruction in library user education. On the whole, however, Illinois academic libraries were only beginning to seriously penetrate advanced areas of library instruction, or those areas beyond the basic library tour and introductory lecture designed for new students and faculty.

In 1979 Larry Miller expanded upon the existing information in Cain and Pausch's directory and produced a complementary directory entitled Library Instruction Programs in Illinois Community College Learning Resources Centers, also published by IACRL. As a result, Illinois academic libraries were well represented in bibliographic instruction summaries, and the many librarians practicing and developing user education programs had immediate access to one another through the listings in the directories.

Since the initial publication of the two directories, no up-dating of the directory information has taken place. In 1982 IACRL's Bibliographic Instruction Committee formed a sub-committee charged with the task of up-dating information in the two directories and producing a single directory of bibliographic instruction. The sub-committee then combined forces with the University of Illinois Library Research Center and joined in the State Library's project of conducting a survey of bibliographic instruction in the state with the aim of appending a computer produced, up-dated directory at the close of the statistical report.

The Library Research Center and the IACRL sub-committee (including Roland Person, BI committee member) designed the survey form (see Appendix, p. 31). The survey form was pre-tested in the following libraries: Illinois Central College; Illinois State University; Illinois Wesleyan University; Millikin University; University of Illinois at Chicago; University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign; Southern Illinois University at Edwardsville; and Southern Illinois University Medical School. The responses from the pre-test were used to create a second and final draft of the survey questionnaire. (The final questionnaire form was not pre-tested.)

The questionnaire was distributed in May of 1982 to all affiliate academic libraries in Illinois through the regional library systems. In addition, the state library systems were asked to send a copy to non-affiliate academic libraries identified through the Illinois Board of Higher Education's Directory of Illinois Academic Institutions. The completed questionnaire was either returned directly to the Library Research Center or to the library system that distributed it. One follow-up was made in December 1982 in an attempt to receive the questionnaires that had not been returned earlier. The final response rate was 143 usable responses out of approximately 200 institutions queried.

When the questionnaires arrived in the Library Research Center, they were checked in and the responses coded and entered into a computer file. This process was done twice by two different people, and a comparison program was run by a third person to compare differences and to find errors. The data were then analyzed by type of institution (see Tables, p. 10-22). Additional data not included in the tables may be requested through the State Library.

This statistical report will be distributed automatically to all affiliate academic libraries within the library systems. Any library that is not an affiliate may request a copy from the Publications Unit, Illinois State Library, Springfield, IL 62756.

SURVEY ANALYSIS

by Robert Daugherty and Lois Pausch

Summary Report: The survey instrument was designed to elicit information for the calendar year 1981/82 relating to bibliographic instruction in Illinois academic libraries. It was intended to cover activities known variously as user education, library orientation, and bibliographic instruction, whether to undergraduates, graduate students, or faculty. Specifically excluded were activities that occurred on a one-to-one basis between an individual librarian and an individual patron pursuing specific information.

The first portion requested general information about the institution which was used for the directory appearing after the survey report. Directory information includes name, address, and telephone number of responding institutions; person responsible for bibliographic instruction; full-time equivalent (FTE) enrollment; subjects covered; types of instruction and instructional materials used; and whether the instructional activities are evaluated.

The directory is organized by type of library. The first section includes university and four-year college libraries (U&C); the second section, two-year or community college libraries (CC); the third section, technical and professional school libraries (T&P). Technical and professional schools include single-purpose post-secondary institutions affiliated with other colleges and universities or with non-academic institutions or which are independent. Survey results treat the same three general categories.

Following the directory are indexes by name of the person reported as being responsible for bibliographic instruction, types of materials used, types of library instruction offered, and subject areas given instruction.

The second portion of the survey instrument requested data on group instruction in Part A and on individual instruction in Part B. Respondents reported, in Part A, the number of times each type of instruction was provided during the year, the average length of time needed for each offering, the number of patrons given instruction, specific subject areas covered, the number and type of library staff involved, and evaluation measures used. In Part B, respondents reported data on instructional materials available for individual use: the number of types available, areas covered, time needed for completion, number of patrons reached, number and type of staff involved, and evaluation measures used. Completion of the questionnaire required considerable effort on the part of respondents. Nevertheless, 143 usable questionnaires were returned, a response rate of more than 70%.

Among methods of group instruction (Tables A1-A4 and Figure 1), the most frequently reported were group tours (87%) lasting about a half an hour. Separate lectures were second (68%); these generally lasted an hour. Instruction through informal groups (29%) and through formal library courses (25%) were less frequently reported. Typically, the size of audience was 30. There was very little formal evaluation reported for the most part; informal evaluation was not reported frequently either. With the exception of formal library courses, most respondents reported no formal evaluation. Informal evaluation was highest for separate lectures in U&C and CC libraries, where non-library classroom instructors provided the evaluations.

Among methods of individual instruction (Tables A5-A8 and Figure 2), handouts were the most frequently reported materials employed (59%). About one-third of the respondents reported that audiovisual programs were available. The programs generally covered library orientation and bibliographic instruction, and were about 20 minutes in duration. Workbooks were available in 13% of the responding institutions. Computer-assisted instruction (CAI) programs were reported in only 5% of the returned questionnaires. Overall, however, there were several different types (a median of 4) available; among CC libraries, the median was 8. Evaluation of materials used was even lower than for methods of group instruction.

With a few exceptions, bibliographic instruction is not evaluated for its effectiveness. It is also clear from the survey results than the principal responsibility for the presentation of this instruction and the preparation of materials rests with librarians in public service (see Figure 3). Interest on the part of libraries in bibliographic instruction is evidenced not only in the high response rate but also in the number of library staff involved in these activities. The number of patrons reached by one form or another appears to be considerable, despite the low level of evaluative measures.

Notes: Columns (b) and (c) are for universities and 4-year colleges, (d) and (e) for community colleges, (f) and (g) for all post-secondary single-purpose technical and professional schools, and (h) and (i) for the simple (unweighted) total of all responses. In parentheses following the short name of each type of institution is given the total number of respondents in this survey of that type.

Row w consists of responses designated as tours conducted in person; row x tours by any audiovisual medium, row y responses not designated for either or for both types, and row z the total for all tours.

Columns (b), (d), (f) and (h) show first the number of responses to each question, and secondly the percentage which that is of the total number of respondents of that type as shown in parentheses in the column headings.

How to read this table, using columns (b) and (c) of rows 1/w-z as an example: Of 57 college and university libraries which responded to this survey, 35 or 61% reported a mean of 26 and a median of 12 tours conducted in person in 1981/82, 2 or 4% a mean of 12 and a median of 12 tours using audiovisual devices, and 11 or 19% a mean of 65 and a median of 21 tours which either were not designated as in person or by audiovisual means or were designated as both. In all, 48 or 84% of these 57 libraries reported a mean of 34 and a median of 12 tours of all kinds in 1981/82.

Analysis of the Tables: Each table presents the data by type of institution. In reading the tables, consult the notes for interpreting data in the various rows and columns; these notes appear only with Table A1.

TABLE A1: GROUP TOURS

Among the types of instructional methods used, group tours were most popular, with 87% of all respondents reporting affirmatively. Community college (CC) libraries were at the high end, with 92% giving tours. The majority of tours, in each case, were conducted by a personal tour guide. Very few libraries reported audiovisual tours as the only tours given, although 29 reported that both types were given. Audiovisual programs using various media are more likely reported in Table A6 as programs for individual instruction. The average number of tours given varied considerably by type of institution. In university and 4-year college (U&C) libraries, tours were given an average of 34 times; in CC libraries, 48 times; and, in technical and professional school libraries (T&P), 11 times. The length of conducted tours was very nearly equal, with 37 minutes for U&C and CC libraries and 35 minutes for T&P libraries. Stand-alone audiovisual tours lasted 20 minutes or less.

The total average number of patrons touring the libraries appears to vary greatly. When these total mean numbers are divided by the mean numbers of tours given, the average tour size was 16 people for U&C libraries, 16 for CC libraries, and 14 for T&P libraries.

Professional librarians in public services clearly shoulder the main responsibility for library tours, as shown in Table A1, question 4. Of all categories of possible tour leaders, public service professionals were the only group reported by a majority of the responding libraries in all three types of institutions. As also can be seen in this table, other professionals and non-professionals were seldom utilized and, when they were, it was mainly in four-year college and university libraries.

Eighty (56%) of the 143 respondents did no evaluation of tours. Of the respondents who did use evaluation measures, 23 (16%) employed informal evaluation, 17 (12%) had an end-of-course student evaluation or some other formal method, while 14 (10%) used a test of some sort.

TABLE A2: FORMAL LIBRARY COURSES

The data indicate that formal library courses were not the method of choice for group instruction in the use of libraries; only 36 (25%) of the respondents had such courses. Fourteen U&C libraries offered the course for credit while two had non-credit courses. Among CC libraries, 10 offered credit courses; two offered non-credit courses. Among T&P libraries, six offered credit courses; two offered non-credit courses. The average length of a credit course in all three types ranged from a high of 21 hours in U&C libraries to a low of 11 hours in CC libraries. Non-credit courses ranged from 15 hours in the T&P libraries to one hour in U&C libraries. The average number of patrons taking the courses differed little by type of library, although the average number taking non-credit courses in technical and professional schools was quite a bit higher than in community colleges and in four-year colleges and universities. For the most part, responsibility for the courses, whether credit or non-credit, was in the hands of professional librarians in public service. In only a few cases were professional librarians from other than public service involved in the courses. Other categories of library staff were virtually not represented in the data.

Informal evaluation was carried out in a total of five cases; end-of-course evaluation in 22; pre-test and/or post-test in 22. These are totals and do not necessarily represent different institutions. An individual course may have been evaluated using more than one type of measure.

TABLE A3: SEPARATE LECTURES

Separate lectures to groups not taking a library course and given outside the library were reported by 97 (68%) of the respondents. University and four-year colleges clearly offered this type of library instruction more often than either of the other two types of libraries. The usual length of this instructional method was one hour for all three types of libraries. As was the case with tours, the average number of patrons participating appears to vary greatly but, when the number attending all lectures is divided by the average number of lectures, the number attending each lecture averaged 16 for U&C libraries, 17 for CC libraries, and 15 for T&P libraries.

As with other categories of library instruction, professional librarians in public service were most involved in presenting lectures. However, a slightly higher percentage of librarians in other than public service gave lectures than conducted formal library courses. Where involvement of other library staff was reported, it was generally in U&C libraries.

No evaluation of lectures was reported by 35% of the respondent libraries. Informal evaluation was indicated by 22% of all libraries; and end-of-course evaluation, by 15%. In addition, 10% of the libraries used a pre-test and/or post-test or the correlation of test scores with grades in other subjects. This represented the highest level of evaluation for any form of library instruction.

TABLE A4: INFORMAL GROUP INSTRUCTION

Information on informal group instruction (including term paper clinics and demonstrations) was supplied by only 41 (29%) of the respondents, 20 U&C libraries, 15 CC libraries, and 6 T&P libraries. The number of times such instruction was given varied widely, with an average high of 34 a year and a low of four. The number of patrons so contacted also varied widely. Where an average of 34 sessions were held, the number in each was four. Where four was the mean number of group meetings, the number of patrons per group was 12. Variation in the average length of time spent on a session was greater here than that reported in other forms of group instruction. In U&C libraries, informal group instruction averaged 152 minutes (over 2 1/2 hours); in community college libraries, the time was 50 minutes; in T&P libraries, sessions averaged 55 minutes. As in all previous areas of group library instruction, the primary providers were professional librarians in public service. All other staff members were barely represented in the answers received.

Twenty-seven (66%) of the libraries offering instruction to informal groups used no evaluation measure to establish the effectiveness of the programs. Informal evaluation was used in nine libraries while more formal methods such as end-of-course forms or pre-test and/or post-test were used by eight libraries and two libraries respectively.

TABLE A5: WORKBOOKS

Whereas the first four tables summarize responses relating to group library instruction, the last four tables relate to instruction of individual users. Printed materials generally included handouts and workbooks. Workbooks function as a programmed learning device, as opposed to the handouts' passive communication of information. As such, workbooks may require more effort in preparation and, on the part of the user, more time to use. Handouts are part of Table A8, below. Because of the user's "participation", there is great potential for evaluation of a workbook in the educational process, but few libraries report such evaluation.

Respondents with workbooks available numbered 19 (13%); U&C libraries responded in the greatest number (10, or 18% of such libraries responding). Although the median number offered was one for all libraries, the median for CC libraries was two. Most of the workbooks were designed to help users learn how to use the library (library orientation) or how to use reference and bibliographic tools (bibliographic instruction). Eight respondents had other types of workbooks available.

The median time needed for completion of the workbooks was 68 minutes. Those from U&C and from T&P libraries ranged above the median. For the former, completion required about 1 1/2 hours; for the latter, two hours. One T&P library had a workbook that required six hours to complete. During the 1981/82 academic year, the average number of persons using the workbooks ranged from five to 4800. Among the 18 responding institutions, the average was over a thousand in university and four-year college libraries, almost 500 in community college libraries, and less than 100 in technical and professional libraries.

Overall, where workbooks were available, most institutions had one or two members of the staff involved in the preparation and presentation of these materials. In most cases, two public service librarians were responsible for the workbooks; clerical employees sometimes did this work, but not among T&P libraries. Only among CC libraries was there reported any involvement of classroom instructors in the preparation and presentation of workbooks. Technical and professional school libraries reported that no evaluation measure was used with the workbooks; U&C and CC libraries made use of evaluation more often than not.

TABLE A6: AUDIOVISUAL PROGRAMS

Next to handouts, which will be discussed with Table A8, audiovisual programs were most often used for individual instruction. Nearly one-third of all respondents made use of slide, slide-tape, filmstrip, or some other form of audiovisual program. This is a different category than that represented in Table A1: Library Tours. Community college libraries made the greatest use of these media and had the greatest number of programs available. Most of the programs dealt with library orientation and bibliographic instruction; 19 CC libraries reported audiovisual programs dealing with other subjects.

Typically, the programs lasted about 20 minutes. One CC library reported a program that was nine hours long; all other cases reported were under one hour. Slide programs were shorter--in most cases, 15 minutes. Filmstrips took longer--50 or 60 minutes, perhaps to fit into a classroom session. The few T&P libraries tended to have programs that were an hour in length as opposed to the overall median of 20 minutes. The number of patrons using these media programs varied almost as greatly as those using workbooks, from five to 3800. This variation is reflected in the means and medians displayed in the table.

In the case of audiovisual programs, public service librarians were again those principally responsible for their presentation. However, others participated in this endeavor to a greater extent than was reported for workbooks; among CC libraries responding, there was greater involvement of librarians outside public service. Among T&P libraries, one respondent reported eight volunteers. A larger proportion of respondents reported that no evaluation measures were used with the audiovisual programs than with workbooks.

TABLE A7: COMPUTER-ASSISTED INSTRUCTION

Only seven respondents reported using computer-assisted instruction (CAI) with patrons. These were fairly evenly distributed among the three categories of libraries. These programs were used more for bibliographic instruction than for general library orientation. No library reported using them for specific subject areas. Of the programs available, two required only 15 minutes to complete, while two others required 60 minutes. However, only the two T&P libraries reported the number of persons who had used the programs during 1981/82. At one library, two patrons had used the program; at the other, 100 patrons. Professional librarians in public service were most often those responsible for the preparation of the instructional programs; one university library reported that six librarians, all from public services, had been so involved. Half of the respondents reported that no evaluation measures were used for the CAI program.

TABLE A8: HANDOUTS

Handouts, a rather generic category of printed materials, were by far the most popular method employed for individual instruction. Nearly 60% of the respondents had handouts available for patrons. As an instructional method, this form was exceeded only by tours (87%) and separate lectures (68%) for groups. All libraries which reported having handouts available had them covering library orientation, bibliographic instruction, and other subject areas. Consult the index here for various subject areas for which instructional programs and/or materials have been reported. Thirty-one libraries reported having one handout available; seven reported having two; nine reported having three. After that, the numbers diminish. One U&C library and one CC library each reported having 54 various handouts. The median number, however, was three.

The average time required to read these handouts ranged up to 72 hours for one CC library. The median was 15 minutes. Exclusion of the one report of 72 hours drops the average to 28 minutes for CC libraries and to 94 minutes for all three types. One CC library reported than 10,000 patrons used the handouts. These libraries in general reported the highest use of their publications. The median reported by them was about 800 as compared to 500 for U&C libraries and 360 for T&P libraries.

As with other forms of instruction, public service librarians were those most often responsible for the preparation of handouts. Typically, two of these librarians prepared the publications; a few were done by colleagues from technical services. In general, the preparation of handouts was handled by a greater variety of library staff than of any other form of instructional material. As with other forms of instruction, evaluation measures were not often used.

The Instructional Role of the Academic Library:
A Survey of a Sample of Illinois College and University Libraries
(To be completed by May 31, 1982)

If you have branch or subject department libraries, please duplicate this form and cover letter, and send a copy to each.

1. Name of the college or university: _____

2. Name of the library: _____

3. Address of the library: _____

4. Name of the branch or departmental library which this form covers:

5. Name, position or title, and telephone number of the person completing this form:

"Instructional role of the academic library" means user education, library orientation, and bibliographic instruction, either to undergraduates, graduate students, or faculty. Any type of such instruction should be recorded here except what happens when one individual librarian assists an individual reader and in the process shows or tells the reader - specifically or in general - how to find what the reader seeks. Answers to the following questions should reflect actual practice in the academic year 1981/82.

DIRECTIONS

We have structured our questions in two parts-group instruction programs on page 2 and programs of individual instruction on page 3. If you don't have exact figures, give us your best estimate. More specific information than the suggested codes will be welcome; add any notes needed to explain your answer. Please explain anything noteworthy in your library's program which is not represented by the categories given here. Use the back of this page, or add a separate page of additional explanation. If you prefer, write out a description of your library's program for 1981/82, covering the points noted on page 2-3 here, and attach it.

X X X

Thank you for answering this survey. Please return one completed copy to the Library Research Center by May 31, 1982

Part A. Group instruction (check if offered)	a No. of Times Given	b Average Length of Time	c Total Audience Number	c Total Audience Type	d Specific Subject Area	e Staff Involved Number	e Staff Involved Type	f Evaluation Measures Used
1. Library tour ( ) a. conducted in person ( ) b. by film or any AV medium ( )
2. Formal library course ( ) a. credit ( ) b. no credit ( ) 1 required ( ) 1. required ( ) 2. optional ( ) 2. optional ( )
3. One or more separate lectures ( ) a. to formal class other than library course ( ) b. to some other group ( )
4. Informal group, e.g., term paper clinic or demonstration ( ) describe
5. Other ( ) describe

Column a. Number of times this type of program was given in 1981/82. Count separately each tour group conducted, each student section of a formal course, etc.

Column b. Average length of time needed for each offering, e.g. 20 minutes average for each tour group, or 22 hours for a formal course (in a college with the quarter system) which met one hour a week.

Column c. Average number of persons by type in all offerings of a given kind of program: For type, use D for freshman students, E for other undergraduates or undergraduates in general, F for graduate students, C for faculty, and H for others. Thus in row 3a if a lecture on library use was given to a class of 14 master's degree candidates in English, the entry in column c should be 14 for Number and F for Type. Multiplying the number in column a by the first number in column c should give the total number of persons who were exposed to this type of program last year.

Column d. Specific Subject Area. Use short name for special subject area as appropriate or use "general."

Column e. Number of persons of each type who were involved in the preparation and presentation of this instruction; indicate the main type of persons so involved, by PS for professional librarians whose main work involves direct service to patrons; NPS for professional librarians whose work is other than direct service to patrons; GA for library school students employed as graduate assistants; OS for other student assistants, LTA for library technical assistants, C for clerical employees, V for volunteers, etc.

Column f. Evaluation measures. Use as many of the following numerical codes as necessary to indicate what measures were used to evaluate the results of the instruction:

1 - None
2 - Pre-test and/or post-test
3 - Correlation of test results with grades in other subject(s)
4 - End-of-course evaluation form completed by students
5 - Informal evaluation by non-library classroom instructor
6 - Other (explain)

(photoreduced)

Part B. Individual instruction (check if offered)	a. Number of Types Available	b. Content Areas Covered	c. Average Time Needed	d. Number of Persons Reached	e. Staff Involved Number	e. Staff Involved Type	f. Evaluation Measures Used
6. A workbook ( )
7. An audiovisual program ( ) specify medium, e.g., a slide tape
8. Computer-assisted instruction ( )
9. Handout or other library-prepared instructional publication ( ) list by title on other side
10. Other ( ) (explain)

Column a. Number of Types Available = number of different workbooks, audiovisual programs, etc. available.

Column b. Content. Use as many of the following numerical codes as necessary to describe the content of the instruction:

1 - Library orientation or how to use the library (e.g., the card catalog, classification system, etc.)
2 - Bibliographic instruction or how to use reference and bibliographic tools (e.g., periodical indexes, abstract services etc.)
3 - Other subject (specify).

Column c. Average Time. Where appropriate, indicate average length of time (in minutes) needed to complete the instruction.

Column d. Number of Persons = total number of persons completing the instruction during academic year 1981/82. (For row 9, this would be the number of copies distributed.)

Column e. Number of staff of each type who were involved in the preparation and presentation of this instruction; indicate the main type of persons so involved, by PS for professional librarians whose main work involves direct service to patrons; NPS for professional librarians whose work is other than direct service to patrons; GA for library school students employed as graduate assistants; OS for other student assistants, LTA for library technical assistants, C for clerical employees, V for volunteers, etc.

Column f. Evaluation Measures. Use as many of the following numerical codes as necessary to indicate what measures were used to evaluate the results of the instruction:

1 - None
2 - Pre-test and/or post-test
3 - Correlation of test results with grades in other subject(s)
4 - End-of-course evaluation form completed by students
5 - Informal evaluation by non-library classroom instructor
6 - Other (explain)
